EXPLANATION.

This index concentrates all the Minnesota law, general and special, enacted by the legislature, so that crude, inconsistent and disconnected laws may be apparent and future legislation and interpretation consistent and harmonious.

The law now in force is first cited and then the prior, superseded or repealed law relating to the same subject, for the reason that to know the present law, the past law should also be known.

The figures immediately following the words refer to the author's compilation of the General Statutes, first edition; thus, the figures 589 after the sentence, "And on failure of occupant," under the head of "Abatement," mean that section of Kelly's Minnesota Statutes. The reference "G. S." is to the General Statutes of 1866. The Session Laws are cited by the year, chapter and section. The Special Laws are designated by the abbreviation "spl." The laws passed at the extra sessions of the legislature by "ex." The Penal Code is cited as "P. C.," the Probate Code as "Prob. C.," and the figures immediately following these refer to the section or sections of those codes. The letter "S" means superseded, when that word is not used, and the citation following it means, that those laws are superseded or repealed by the laws preceding it, except when the word "by" is used, in which case the former law is superseded or repealed by the latter. Many, but not all, of the early laws were superseded and repealed by chapter 122 of the General Statutes of 1866, in which case the reference is, "repealed 1866 G. S. ch. 122," or "repealed G. S. ch. 122." Under the name of each county is cited all the laws concerning that county, except, that when there is independent legislation specifically applicable to a town, village, city, or other municipality within such county, the law relating to such municipality is placed under its own name.

The occasional reference to Kelly's Statutes was made, because it was necessary to save all the space and expense possible, in consequence of the very limited sale of this book, and because the same sectional references will apply to the new and exhaustive revision (with reliable and complete notes of the origin and growth of the law and of all the decisions) which the author has been for years and is now preparing. If the compilation of 1878, known as the General Statutes of 1878, contained the citations to all the intervening laws between the date of that compilation and the state revision of 1866, instead of giving and citing the latest enactment only, that compilation would have been cited; but as it only gives and cites the last enactment in cases where there were several or more, and as this index cites the state revision and subsequent amendments, a citation to this compilation would be duplicating the references and incurring an expense which would not be reimbursed.

The reasons for engaging in this laborious and perhaps profitless work are: first, there existed no proper and speedy means of finding the past and the present laws of this state; second, the indexes to the early session laws are so imperfect that many laws do not appear or are incorrectly cited; third, the indexes to all the compilations and the revision of 1866 are more or less inexact; fourth, many of the amendatory laws do not cite the prior or original law correctly, or do not cite the law which they amend; fifth, many of the laws amend repealed laws or amend the amendatory law, without reference to the original or repeal, or amend the original without reference to the amendment; sixth, the repealing statute in the revision of 1866, namely, chapter 122, does not, in some instances, correctly cite the law intended to be repealed, and that revision does not repeal all prior laws, nor contain all unrepealed prior laws; seventh, some General Laws have been classified and published with the Special Laws, and Special Laws with the General Laws, and laws classified and purporting to be Special Laws have been found to be amendments of General Laws and vice versa, which would seem to render all present compilations of the General Laws more or less imperfect.

In addition to the index of the subject matter of the law in this state, tables are given at the end of this volume, showing all changes in the revisions and compilations of the General Laws, so that any general law can be traced to its origin.
